WAR INJURIES SCHEME.

Sir,

place below
I am directed to refer to my letter No.F.87-41/W, dated the 2nd March 1943.

2. With reference to the amended clause 35 of the British Indian Scheme, the Government of India observe that the formula of "ordinary residence", which this clause now provides, is considered to be more elastic and easy to operate than the formula of "nationality" or "domicile" in their technical senses. The British Indian Scheme will now, therefore, cater for all subjects 'ordinarily resident in British India', and also to servants of the Crown wherever they may be in India. "Ordinary residents" of States, if they receive a war injury in British India, will, therefore, probably go without relief unless their parent State has made provision for their relief, and it is therefore for the Indian States to have their own War Injuries Scheme, under which relief will be available to people "ordinarily resident" in their territories, whether the injury is actually sustained in their territories or in British India. The Government of India have already made provision for granting relief to people ordinarily resident in British India in respect of injuries sustained outside British India but in India; and they consider

it it is desirable that all Indian States should reciprocate in the interests of their residents.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

SECRETARY TO THE RESIDENT.
